sometime now. She has always been outgoing," Dutchuck said. "If it's putting on her own lemonade stand or even her own rummage sale, she's quite the business girl."

Brinley created a poster for the event and Dutchuck marketed the event by putting it on the center's website page and in the Beulah Beacon. It is also shared on the Beulah Elementary and Middle School's Facebook page.

"I love this idea and love that we have these little entrepreneurs in our community," Dutchuck said. "They are all excited to explore the idea of getting their stuff out and selling. Some kids are making soap and lotion, which isn't easy to do even as for adults."

Dutchuck said the center will have between six to eight tables reserved for the young vendors participating and, if attendance becomes too large, the event will be moved to the center's gymnasium.

Brinley, who one day wants to become a veterinarian, said she learned a lot from this experience.

"I learned how to invest and getting money out of it," she said. "I learned putting money in, trying to do the work and learned about organization."
