Morton Mandan Public Library hosts art showcase

By Ryan Johnson
rnjohnson04@outlook.com

The Morton Mandan Public Library supports the arts in many ways, from fostering a love for reading and storytelling in the young, to hosting book clubs for adults. But on Thursday, May 21, the library shined a spotlight on an artistic medium many of us would do well to pay more attention to. They hosted artist AJ Bauers and showcased two of her paintings as a preview for her upcoming exhibition at the Bismarck Art & Galleries Association.

Bauers and library staff made a point of teaching attendees how to properly interpret and discuss art. After each art piece was introduced, attendees were told to look at it quietly for about a minute. Afterwards, they were encouraged to share any thoughts they had on the piece. After a few minutes of thoughts being shared, Bauers would step in to give her account of what the painting represents to her, and what she was trying to convey.

A North Dakota native, Bauers' artwork captures the beauty and ruggedness of the Peace Garden State. The first painting she showcased, titled "Wild Horses Stay Wild," depicts a young Theodore Roosevelt gazing at the Badlands on horseback. Bauers said the painting was created in response to authorities recalling wild horses from the Badlands, a move she wanted to protest. According to Bauers, her painting serves as a "love letter to the horses of the Badlands." It exists to show that "we can take things from the land without disrupting the land."

cy." The painting depicts a father and child playing in a peaceful lake, while a family of deer sits in the foreground of the painting, framing the lakeside scene. The doe of the family looks towards the viewer, wearing a worried expression on her face. Bauers noted that the doe is meant to depict that humans are, to animals, very dangerous. And yet, the painting as a whole is meant to convey a love for nature, a love that should be passed on to every generation. Nature is certainly fragile, but it is also worth loving.

Bauers said she loves the "brainstorming" and "unknown" parts of artistry. "It's that process of thinking of what to do, and then actually putting it on the page, and seeing if I can do it, that's my favorite part of the art journey," she said.

"I found Bismarck and Mandan to be a very open-gated community when it came to the art-world," she said, "I feel like the more that things like digital media... and AI artwork is created... physical artwork is being more greatly appreciated." While acknowledging that there are many challenges facing aspiring artists, Bauers remained confident that "the love of arts [is] strong and we'll see it survive."

Bauers and the Morton Mandan Public Library, are both helping to keep that love strong. Bauers art exhibition is set to open on June 2 and will go until June 19. More information about it can be found at bismarck-art.org/exhibits/. Meanwhile, the library has a very active summer calendar, with events scheduled for book-lovers of all ages. More information about those events can be found at mortonmandan.librarycalendar.com
