

SPEECH:

Grant County's trio rose above the competition and carved out a place in school history.

Johnston finds her voice

Sophomore Rachel Johnston qualified in Storytelling with a creative retelling of Sleeping Beauty — a performance that includes such dramatic commitment that she falls to the floor during the speech.

One judge at a previous meet joked that Johnston deserved a separate award just for that moment.

Johnston said qualifying for state was something she never expected when the season began.

"I didn't think I would make it to state because at the beginning of the season, I wasn't very confident in this speech at all," she said. "But then I started placing more and more, and all of a sudden I placed in regionals and another meet. It was very fun."

Johnston said speech feels like a natural fit.

"I was home-schooled until I was a freshman, and I've always had a knack for talking," she said with a laugh. "In fact, I used to be called 'life story.'"

She said the activity has become one of the most meaningful parts of school life.

"It's a competition I get to do and I can excel in it. I really like it and I like the people I participate with. It's the best part of this whole school experience."

Zacher reaches long-awaited goal

Senior Aidan Zacher qualified in Speech to Entertain at the Beulah meet on Feb. 10 with an original speech centered around life's everyday annoyances.

"My speech is about things that annoy me," Zacher said. "So it's basically just me going on an angry rant."

Behind the humor is years of determination.

Zacher said he had come painfully close to state before, missing by a single point in each of the previous seasons.

"Making it to state is really special to me because every year leading up to this, I have been just one point away," he said.

When he finally qualified early in his senior season, the moment was unforgettable.

"It was one of the greatest feelings of relief and excitement that I had ever felt up to that point because I've been working for that for so long," he said. "It's such a great feeling knowing all of my hard work has finally paid off."

He hopes younger students give speech a chance.

"Speech not only builds up your social skills and allows you to be a fantastic speaker, but it also allows you to meet some really cool people."

Kauzlarich breaks a 40-year drought

Sophomore Braydon Kauzlarich qualified in Humorous Interpretation at the New Salem meet on March 13 with The Pet Shop by John Cleese and Graham Chapman of Monty Python's Flying Circus.

His performance features a parrot owner discovering his bird has died and confronting the person who sold it to him.

Ketterling noted Kauzlarich is the first student from Elgin/Grant County in 40 years to qualify in either Serious or Humorous Interpretation.

For Kauzlarich, the honor is the result of persistence.

"I have been trying for three years to get into the state competition," he said. "If you keep working, eventually you will get really good at what you do."

He said speech gave him something athletics never did.

"Sports were never for me, so I joined speech to be a part of a team," he said. "I think everyone should participate in speech because it gives you a big sense of competition and you get to meet a lot of great people."

A proud moment for Grant County

In a small school where opportunities are often measured by effort and determination, Grant County's three state qualifiers have delivered something special.

They have made history, inspired younger students and proven that success comes in many forms — sometimes with laughter, sometimes with storytelling, and sometimes through the courage to stand up and speak.

This weekend in Mandan, they won't just represent themselves. They'll represent a school and community proud to see its voices heard on the state stage.
