cultural identity, passing down ancestral knowledge, promoting intergenerational connections, revitalizing indigenous languages, and educating the public are important aspects behind the sacred celebrations.

The beauty behind Powwows is deeper than the rhythmic drumming and the captivating clothing worn.

Each celebration tells a story. Just as each tribe is different, Powwows have a particular meaning and allows Native Americans to express themselves. Powwows bear spirituality and healing.

Bids Requested

The City of Carson is accepting bids to demolish a house that was partially destroyed by fire at 404 Montana St. N. in Carson. The bidder will be responsible to do the following:

- Remove household items that remain in the house.
- All building materials and household items will need to be separated before taking it to the landfill.
- The basement will need to be filled with dirt.
- The concrete/bricks in basement need to be removed.
- Water and sewer lines are to be capped.

The bidder must complete the project in 30 days from the date the bid is accepted. Send bids to the City of Carson - 100 South Main St. - Carson, ND 58529 by noon MT on Friday, May 3, 2024.

The City of Carson reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

GRID: lining up permits

“We’ll be in the permitting phase from late 2024 to late 2026,” he said.

“We’ve talked with landowners up and down the project,” Johnson said. “If the government blesses the route, then we will exercise those options with those easements.”

Roughly 350 landowners will be involved across Montana and North Dakota.

Construction will commence after the project obtains the necessary regulatory approvals, and the North Plains Connector could be operational by 2031-32, Johnson said.

“Challenges with construction are getting equipment and getting the converter stations. At each end of the project, there’s a big converter station and those are bid out for 10 years,” Johnson said. The project is also competing with governments around the world for supplies, he said. HVDC converter stations are the substations where direct current electricity at transmission voltages is converted to lower-voltage alternating current.

“So, we’re a bit constrained by availability of the converter stations, but still making very good progress,” he said.

Traditionally, a transmission line from concept to permitting phase takes about five years, he said.

The idea for this project came about following Storm Uri in 2021.

“(Storm Uri) highlighted some of the weaknesses in the grid and John Arnold decided to apply risk capital toward projects that would provide better connectivity,” Johnson said.

North Plains Connector will connect Colstrip, Mont., the site of a coal-fired power plant with large transmission facilities and those lines going west, to an existing substation near Center and those lines going east.

In North Dakota, North Plains Connector will also build a substation to connect the Southwest Power Pool just east of St. Anthony.

This type of connector is fairly unique in North Dakota, and the United States. And as an HVDC line, it will be able to transmit power over longer spans with less line loss.

“There are just a few connectors up and down the U.S. and they’re all relatively small. This is 3,000 megawatts, so really providing a very large connection. The company is looking at a number of those type of connections down the seam, where there aren’t any of those types of connections between the East and the West,” Johnson said. “This is just the furthest along in the process.”

“This will provide more resiliency and stability across the system and open up new markets going both directions,” Johnson said.

Through the transmission line, generators of power will have access to new markets going both directions.

The North Plains Connector is expected to be owned, operated and maintained by local utilities, and those conversations are also underway, Johnson said.

Grid United has donated funds to local community foundations, and various local government entities are applying for funding through the Transmission Siting and Economic Development (TSED) Grant Program, which is available due to the expected construction by Grid United. The U.S. Department of Energy’s funding opportunity of up to $300 million in grants is available to cities, counties and tribes in the impacted area.
