MEADOW NO NEWS

JILL FRIESZ

Do you know what the "Rule of 8" is? Well, apparently if you Google it, it's some sort of math wizardry. Those who know me know math is not my strong suit, so for me to be writing about anything that has to do with numbers isn't likely.

In this instance, it's a lifestyle.

I watched a video a few days ago and it was talking about dividing our days into three equal, eight-hour segments.

- Work hard for eight solid hours

- Spend eight hours doing things that bring you joy

- Dedicate eight hours for sleep

This sounds so easy and kind of like a no-brainer to have a happy, well-balanced life.

As I was watching the video, I made a mental note to try to follow

Editorial

this "Rule of 8" to bring more balance into my life.

The problem is, I can't fit all the work that needs to be completed in a day into eight hours. I can barely fit it into 12 hours. I know I'm not alone in this – it seems like the eight-hour work-day is a relic of the past.

However, for the sake of sanity and balance, I am actively working to lighten my load at work. I want to thank my incredible staff for stepping up and pitching in wherever they are needed!

Recently I was visiting with a friend, and we were talking about how great the "Rule of 8" sounds in theory... but it just isn't possible.

I love sleep and do my best to try to get eight hours of sleep most nights – so that, on top of a 12-hour workday already accounts for 20 hours of the day.

Subtract getting ready for work, driving to and from town, grocery shopping, cooking dinner and cleaning up the house – there's not much time left.

The notion that we can dedicate a full eight-hour block to activities that bring us happiness is another ideal that doesn't seem realistic in modern life. Joyful moments are often squeezed into the cracks of our busy schedules rather than existing as dedicated periods of time.

Instead of striving for an unattainable balance, we should focus on a more flexible approach to our time. Some days may require more focus on work, while others may involve more rest or joy. The key is to listen to our own bodies needs and prioritize what truly matters, rather than adhering to a rigid eight-hour framework.

In the end, the richness of our experiences can't be measured in hours, but in the quality of moments we experience.

Local weather outlook

BLAKE RAFFERTY

The Week Ahead:

Dry, quiet fall weather will continue across the county over the next week. In addition to it being dry, temperatures will remain above to well above average. Several passing cold fronts will cause temperatures to dip, the most notable one on Thursday. In typical fall fashion, winds will be breezy much of the week. Wind direction will change as fronts propagate through. Many local jurisdictions have instituted burn bans due to curing fuels and expanding drought conditions. Check the forecast and local regulations if you plan to burn this week.

Thursday: Partly cloudy. Highs in the mid 60s.

Friday: Partly cloudy. Highs in the low 70s.

Saturday: Partly cloudy. Highs in the upper 70s.

Sunday: Mostly cloudy. Highs in the low 70s.

Monday: Mostly cloudy. Highs in the low 80s.

Tuesday: Mostly cloudy. Highs in the low 80s.

Wednesday: Mostly cloudy. Highs in the low 80s.

Long Term: Above average temperatures with below average precipitation are favored through the long term period.

This will likely keep fire weather concerns at the forefront of the forecast for the foreseeable future.
