DAKOTA RUSH HOUR
Barb Kraft

Greetings!
My grandmothers, Mildred Birdsall and Mary Kalenze, and their families homesteaded just north of Hwy 2, their homesteads not far from each other. When they came to North Dakota the prairie was basically a blank canvas.

Their parents, the Wixer's (Mildred) and Huber's (Mary) wanted to build a life. They knew the importance of neighbors, and taking care of the land. They learned how to work through the hard times on the land. They were active in building the surrounding Berthold community.

After they were married, they both farmed and raised cattle.

They both became active in the Nonpartisan League. The Nonpartisan League advocated for state control of mills, grain elevators, banks and other farm-related industries in order to reduce the power of corporate and political interests from Minneapolis and Chicago.

If Mildred and Mary came back from the afterlife and were holding a conversation today, the conversation may go "I have heard, the government is subsidizing farmers to farm land that should be used to graze cattle." That definitely will make it more expensive for ranchers as they have to travel with their cattle to graze or supplement their grazing with feeds. This will also add a considerable fuel cost.

The conversation between Mildred and Mary would continue: I remember when The US Constitution was clear on the subject. Article 1, Section 8, provides no role for the federal government regulating American farmers. That is the way it was (with rare exceptions) until about 1930's.

Mildred and Mary would be amazed to find that Communist China owns some of our meat packing plants. Our banks, and fuel stations are owned by Minnesota companies. They would comment "At least North Dakota stills owns The Bank of North Dakota".

Mildred and Mary would continue their conversation saying; there is a new word they are using it is 'globalization'. A couple examples of this would be: the recent trip to china in which President Trump secured rare earth minerals for one year and negotiated with tariffs. He negotiated a deal with American farmers's soybeans. The beef industry is affected by the negotiating President Trump did in Argentina.

Mildred and Mary would end their conversation with the intention to learn about globalization. They realize, this is an important factor in local and national agriculture. Please join us next week as we discuss their research.

Notice: The Berthold-Carpio Ecumenical Service will be held on Sunday, Nov. 23rd at 5:00 pm at the Zion Lutheran Church in Berthold.

Until we meet again, enjoy your week!

Sincerely,
Barb

Grain Market

Berthold Farmers Elevator's Grain Merchandiser, Morgan Hall, reports:

Harvest is winding down in the countryside as corn and sunflowers are coming off the fields. Fall fertilizer is going down and fields are getting cleaned up before spring. The latest price rally brought a round of selling for wheat, canola, and beans. Price direction this week has been driven by soybeans and the trade discussions. Soybeans have seen good basis improvement the last couple of weeks proving there has been sales of beans to China. China did not take off the 13% import tax on US soybeans, which makes Brazilian beans cheaper. China did buy 6-8 boats from Brazil after buying from us.

We are hearing lower yields reported in the country than originally expected and what is reported on USDA supply and demand report for both soybeans and corn. The market expects yield reduction on the next WASDE report.

Wheat has seen selling this week around the $5 mark. We did see China buy different classes of wheat from the US. Canola has been following soybeans.

This week was the canola and durum forum in Minot. It was made clear that there are issues with the durum crop this year, the rains came at the wrong time. What percentage of the crop is unclear, most think somewhere between 25%-40%. Price action more reflects the mills have good ownership for the next couple of months. Flax and pea prices remain steady. Check out our website for the most up to date information and prices. Have a great week!
