Prairie Fare: Do You Know The Six Steps To Fruit And Vegetable Safety?

By Julie Garden-Robinson, Food and Nutrition Specialist, NDSU Extension

"What's the best way to clean fresh produce?" someone asked. "I've heard that strawberries are especially a problem."

'We recommend using plenty of running water and a vegetable brush on firmer-skinned produce. Also, avoid cross-contamination," I replied.

"I just read something about using baking soda and water, and I'll send you the link," she continued.

She was right about another method. If you are looking to remove pesticides from produce, consider the results of a study performed at the University of Massachusetts and published in the Journal of Agricultural and Food Chemistry in 2017. The researchers found an easy way to remove a specific type of pesticide from apples using a common ingredient in our cupboards.

Soaking apples in a one percent solution of baking soda in water for about fifteen minutes removed more than 96 percent of a particular

Planning & Zoning Commission ATTEST: Melissa Vachal Planning & Zoning Administrator Sept. 3, 10, 2025 pesticide from apples in a well-controlled lab setting. That's about one teaspoon of baking soda for every two cups of water. Be sure to rinse the produce well under cool running water after the soaking process.

You can also peel the apples, but you are losing the valuable fiber in the skin and the nutrients right under the skin.

Although we often hear about the annual "dirty dozen" fruit and vegetable list based on pesticide residues, bacteria are more likely to cause serious illness and death.

Nutrition and food safety professionals remind us that the health benefits of eating fruits and vegetables outweigh the risks of pesticide residues.

Unfortunately, fruits and vegetables were associated with half of all illnesses in produce in a recent study by a collaborative group that included the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Food and Drug Administration and the U.S. Department of Agriculture's

Food Safety and Inspection Service. Leafy greens accounted for most of the illnesses. The plant categories included fruits, fungi vegetables (mushrooms), leafy greens, root
