Acquainted with Grief

By Sarah Dixon Young

A married couple came to me after Sunday school.

They had eaten supper with one of our students, and they were troubled.

"This little girl shouldn't even know about the things she was telling us," the wife said.

The husband agreed and asked the girl's name again so that they could pray for her. Both husband and wife had experienced trauma growing up themselves, and it grieved them to find another child caught in the same malicious trap. Their grief was transformed to compassion as they ministered to the girl.

Grief is a funny thing. One minute, I am standing on a step ladder, rummaging through the cabinet for a marinade recipe, and the next minute, faded handwriting on push the door closed a scrap of paper has me sitting on the floor sobbing.

The grief we experience in ministry isn't too different.

When I went to visit some children at their home this week, I saw the little one playing outside. As I approached, I realized there was a whole host of adults inside the open door of the house. They were sitting in a circle, all leaned forward, like drummers around a drum.

They weren't making music, however. When they glimpsed me, there was a wild scramble to to conceal the powders and pills. The child then took my attention. Soiled clothes from the night before clung to the child, even though it was late afternoon. I visited outside for a while, and when I turned to leave, the child clung to me.

"Don't leave me here alone! Please! Don't leave me here alone!"

The rest of the day was a haze. I couldn't concentrate on anything I was reading or the conversations I had. It was hard to complete a task. I wanted to sleep.

Paul Miller, in his book, the future. A Praying Life, writes,

"When you lament, you live simultaneously in the past, present, and future. A lament connects God's past promise with my present chaos, hoping for a better future. So, on the cross, Jesus cried out, 'My God, My God, why have you forsaken me?"

If we allow our griefwhether from loss or from ministry- to overwhelm us, then it remains just grief, crippling us and rendering us useless to the present moment. However, when we allow the Lord to transform our grief to compassion, He uses it to fuel His work in Jesus was "a man of sorrows, acquainted with grief." When we look closely at the times He was grieved, it helps us navigate our own laments.

Jesus wept when His cousin John was executed and when His friend Lazarus died. Jesus is the Resurrection and the Life, but death still grieved Him.

Jesus grieved over the Pharisees' hardness of heart when He was about to heal the man with the withered hand. He yearned for them to enter into the man's grief so that He could create in

Reflection: "The Foundation for Independence Day"

by Fr. Bernard Pfau

We are one year away from observing the 250th anniversary of the Birth of our Nation, which resulted in the War of Independence from England. Our Founders composed the Declaration of Independence to express the hopes and ideals for a new nation, free to form its own constitution to guide this great Nation. And so we believe this Country to be "One Nation, under God, indivisible, with justice and liberty for all". July 4th celebrations are meant to keep these key ideas in mind, the foundation for our Independence Day.

The desire for independence was not something new to the Founders of this great Nation. We can trace this movement for freedom and independence back as far as the Old Testament, with the Israelites, under the leadership of Moses, struggling to be free of slavery and oppression from the Egyptian rulers. The entire Exodus Story is included in the Passover celebration which was central to the Old Testament religious practices. This Story reveals the Hand of God in delivering the Israelites and guiding them to the Promised Land. Thus we can trace our Independence Day celebration back to the deepest desires of the human race to be free of oppression and free to follow their own dreams for themselves and their loved ones.

Let us not forget that Jesus lived at a time of great conflict between nations. Yes, the Israelites were again being oppressed by the Roman Empire, and they had limited freedom to exercise their religious beliefs. That is why they believed the long-awaited "Messiah" would free them from foreign rule. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, came to set people free so they could live as "Children of God", and not necessarily to be free of all oppression. He teaches us that we must be free of sin before we can achieve true freedom. He held out the Cross as the instrument of our freedom and as the means of our Salvation.

The celebration of Independence Day should consist of more than picnics and filling the heavens with fireworks. It should remind us of the need we have to turn to Christ as One who who alone can lead us to true freedom. He has conquered the world by His love and holds out to you and me the opportunity to really be free of this world that holds in bondage and keeps us from reaching our full potential.
