Leaving my mother I went to find my father, 80 miles from there by train. As a man was passing my father's house, I embarked with him. Arriving there my father was at the barn door. The man to whom I had told my story said to my father, "I am bringing you your son that you lost so long ago during the war time. " My little boy!" It is a long time that he is dead." My father and I talked a long time. My father married three times—now he had three other sons. The third wife was almost White. The second Indian wife left him. At Watson, I had three half brothers and two half sisters. From my own mother, I had a half-brother, Moses Williams, a pure Indian. I came to live here at St. Michael's, N. Dak. In 1901 to stay here always. My wife died in the fall of 1941.

This is the end of Frank Jetty Junior's story.

Author's Note: It has been said that Father Belcourt had started this Sisterhood for Indian girls but was dissolved some years later. Are these the real Facts? We know not.

Frank is telling how the Dakota fled Minnesota. First going to Devils Lake (camping at Sweetwater Lake and Mission Bay area. Moving on, he doesn't say a word about the Sibley 1863 expedition fighting the Dakota at the battles of Stony Lake, Buffalo Lake, and Big Mound. Then moving southwest to Bismarck, where Frank tells in detail how the Dakota, (now joined with the Yanktonai and Lakota), escape across the Missouri River. The next step in the journey was traveling to the Turtle Mountain, then moving east to Pleasant Lake (northeast Benson County) moving on to Pembina to hunt buffalo. Meeting the Metis (Maytee) Buffalo hunters and where Josephine and Frank are adopted by them.

We must understand that he was only 7-8 years old. Perhaps he learned the details later listening to others. In any case we have a detailed account of the plight of the Dakota. It is better than nothing. Dakota Goodhouse, who teaches at United Tribes Technical College in Bismarck, has collected from the Yanktonai and Lakota the details of the crossing the Missouri River. The warriors stood on the bluff where Mary College now stands and egged Sibley to continue the battle. His report states that General Sibley realized that he would have to return to Minnesota before the winter. The Seven Fires Warriors say Sibley chickened out, turned around and fled.

Goodhouse, Dakota Oceti Sakowin; History and Culture by First Scout, Blogspot.com Mr. Goodhouse has written about Apple Creek January 31, 2013, and on November 17, 2014. I urge anyone interested in this area of Dakota culture to seek this blog.
