For a second year in a row, sophomore students at New Salem-Almont High School participated in a mock interview event last Wednesday, April 29 at the New Salem Auditorium as a wrap up to their introductions in work-based learning. 27 students participated in one-on-one mock interviews with business owners, leaders, managers, and professionals of various different careers fields.

Led by NSA counselor Amanda Wald, the mock interview event offered students a chance to gain real experience and understanding of the interview process and grow their interviewing skills.

As part of the preparation process, students spent time researching and looking into various careers and writing résumés and cover letters. The day of, students practiced their interview skills and were challenged to highlight their skills, experiences, accomplishments, goals, and interests. Students were also asked and invited to ask questions pertaining to the career field they were interested in.

Local leaders in career fields such as Business, Marketing, IT, Automotive, Nursing/Education, Law, AG, Sales, Banking/Finance, Teaching, Military and Business were in attendance conducting interviews with students in multiple different rounds.

(As a means of transparency, Reporter Richard Mendoza was invited to participate in the event and interviewed students interested in the field of Journalism).
